CANNES International Film Festival Round Up

One of the most renowned film festival in the world, The 69th Cannes International Film festival and le Marche Du Films ended in style on May 22, 2016. The week long affair started on May 11, with an impressive lineup of movies, celebrities to striking interesting film deals; the prestigious film event has seen filmmakers from all over the globe flock to Palais des Festivals et des Congrès in Cannes, France to showcase their work and to compete for the Palme d'Or, world cinema's top prize. The festival opened with Café Society by 80-year-old Woody Allen, and I, Daniel Blake by Ken Loach, 80 next month, both in good form, though their films couldn't be more different - amber-hued nostalgia for Hollywood in the 1930s versus a searing indictment of the destruction wrought on individuals by Britain's Kafka-esque social welfare system. Like every year this year too, Cannes Film festival upheld its founding purpose to draw attention to and raise the profile of films with the aim of contributing towards the development of cinema, boosting the film industry worldwide and celebrating cinema at an international level. This year's festival saw over 11,900 participants.
